"Oh, we'll find him presently, never fent?" she cried encouragingly, as she went close to him, put her arm round him and gave him a kiss.

He did not exactly resent the attention, but he was not grateful. He stared at her, and it seemed as ifaunother moment would see him puckering up his lip for a good cry. She was thankful to find that he was apparently English, though she seemed to detect traces of a foreign accent in his speech, and of a certain indistinctness which seemed to her traceable to the same cause. To avert the calanity of a flood of tears, which would make him wholly unintelligible, Mabin seizes upon the Teddy bear as a diversion. "Why, look," cried she, seizing the bear and pointing to his stolid, bead like eyes, "he's going to cry!" Arrested on the threshold of hi own outburst, the boy turned his eyes upon the bear, and, poking: soft finger into its face, said will
